Fund Commentary at 31 December 2009

The market continued to strengthen during the fourth quarter with the FTSE All Share Index (Total Return) rising by over 5%. As the world economy continued to recover, the mining sector performed strongly. While the portfolio does not hold the large cap miners, it did not miss out totally on these gains with ATH Resources rising by around 75% on their payment of the dividend. In contrast to the previous quarter, banks fared badly with Royal Bank of Scotland losing nearly 40% of its value and Lloyds Banking Group falling by around 25%. The final quarter was a very poor one in relative terms for the small cap sector. This mainly reflected some profit taking following two very strong quarters. Given the portfolio's exposure to the broad market this was a poor background. Many of the ratings in this area appear extremely attractive and good performance should follow as trading conditions improve. During the coming year, central banks should embark on their exits from quantitative easing. This is likely to produce volatility, as could the run up to the general election in the UK.
