Fund Commentary at 31 December 2009

The environment for equity investment remained broadly supportive in the fourth quarter and world markets continued to rise, albeit at a reduced rate. The initial early optimism has been followed by tangible evidence that the highly reflationary policy is beginning to have the desired effect. The resulting bounce in equities has been amplified in emerging markets and related assets, whose prospects appear particularly attractive relative to the more anaemic developed economies. The fund underperformed the benchmark during the quarter, explained by two main factors: its underweight to metals and mining, which continued to perform strongly, and profit taking in small and mid caps that, had bounced earlier in the year. Our overweight in technology continued to add to performance, while Japan showed encouraging signs in December as policymakers appeared to take new steps to deal with the country's economic problems. We are happy to maintain our blended investment approach, but believe that several of our long-term restructuring stories will also yield rewards over time.
